Painting the town red, white and blue

Heather Acheson/Post-Record

TJ Crawford, a Camas public works department employee, completes red, white and blue striping work on Northeast Third Avenue on Friday afternoon. The patriotic painting can be seen between Dallas Street and the Third Avenue Bridge. According to Public Works Director Eric Levison, because the city owns its own striping equipment the work was completed for $400—the cost of the paint. The effort, in honor of the upcoming Fourth of July holiday, has been done in the past and was brought back again this year at the direction of Mayor Scott Higgins.
